John Mitchell's Address.

John Mitchell, the Irish Patriot, delivered an address on Thursday last, before the Washington and receives hard criticism at his hand.

The highest Civilization in the world means simple justice; yet, if you ask the first ten men you may casually meet in a railroad car, what they mean by the Civilization they talk of, (for almost everybody talks of it and congratulates himself and his neigh-GOOD assortment Fancy and Plain Buckles, opened at the Hat and Cap Emporium.

The sumptuous appointments of houses and carriages, are indeed a splendid the while. As for what is called commerce, certainly there is nothing intrinsically base or evil in trade and traffic, yet it may be said with at least equal truth, that there is nothing elevating, refining or purifying in it. "As a nail," saith the son of Sirach, "sticketh fast between the corners of stones, so doth sin stick fast between buying and selling." However, that be, certain it is, that there is no more spirit; and the present age has seen more human beings slain in one nation, for the mere sake of commerce, in three years, than any thirty years' war ever slew-more miserably and ignominiously slain, than The every day sentimental cant about universal
